Sunshine.

BY LYDIA M. MILLARD.

Once a dispute arose
Between the wind and sun,
Which one the greater was,
Which had most wonders done.

The wind did rise in rage,
The sun with fever high,
When the water did engage,
The doubtful cause to try.

"He is the greater one,"
Thus calm the water spoke,
"Who makes the traveler
The first take off his cloak."

The wind began at last,
With all his might again,
And blew his fiercest blast
O'er every hill and plain.

Then the traveler's cloak was pressed,
Closer and closer round,
And 'cross his shivering breast
Tighter and tighter bound.

Then the sun came out so bright
And danced upon the streams,
Till the traveler felt the might
Of his warm and welcome beams.

And when his smile at last
Shone bright and brighter round,
The traveler gladly cast
His cloak upon the ground.

Then all the brooks went singing,
"The sun, the sun is king!
His royal smile is bringing
Great joy to everything."

And over all creation,
Persuasion conquers more
Than all the stormy blustering
Of authority's loud roar.

The coldest heart is conquered
By the charm divine
Of a genial manner,
And a smile's sunshine.

Dress Reform.

A Boston genius has inaugurated another dress reform. He proposes to amputate the—the shirt; in fact, that is—it's a kind of delicate subject to discuss in the columns of a family paper, but what this dress reformer wants to do, and in his own case actually has done, is to amputate the—as we said before, right about amidships; cut off all that portion of the amendment, to speak in parliamentary phrase, coming after that is below, the word tag, or, more correctly, the tag itself, that fastens the shirt front down to the waistband. He would thus dispense entirely with the—ha—he would dispense with it, you see, and have merely the shirt waist—that is, without any. It does appear to be a waist (joke) of raw material, but whether the saving would compensate for the brevity of the garment thus curtailed (another joke) remains to be seen; or rather it—not in good society, anyhow; but the fact is—however, anyone can see—or n., the fact is you cannot see.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Peoria, Ill., has only forty thousand inhabitants, but there is one respect in which it is the biggest city in the land. There is no other from which the Government receives so large an amount of internal revenue. Thirteen immense distilleries make this the centre of whiskey manufacture. The tax is ninety cents a gallon. The largest distillery is under contract to send every drop of its product to France, to be used in the native wines of that vine-clad country.

At Ste. Genevieve the other day, Arnold, the 7-year-old son of Edward Seyssler, and another little boy named Franz Jenny, were playing together, at the home of the latter, when they discovered a .22-calibre pistol, and began to handle it. An apprentice of Franz's father saw the boys playing with the weapon, and took it from them, and, pointing it at Arnold, said: "I will shoot you!" when the pistol was discharged, the ball from it striking the child on the left side of the chin, knocking out two teeth, and imbedding itself in his jaw. At last accounts the wounded boy was getting along all right.

Some of Farmington's business men have on foot an enterprise which, if carried out (so the Times thinks), cannot fail to be of great advantage to the business interests of the town. It is the starting of a daily hack line between Farmington and Syentite and Knob Lick. The granite quarries at the two places last named are among the most thriving institutions of St. Francois county, and large amounts of money are disbursed every month to the men employed in them. It is the intention to raise a stock company with a capital stock of $800, one-half paid up, for the purpose of starting the hack line. Up to last Thursday contributions to the enterprise footed up $515.
